* Types of edits Photoshop makes There are three main types of edits you can make to images with Photoshop. You can add, create, or remove layers. You can modify the opacity of an entire image, and even the opacity of a specific object. You can also change the size, color, or shape of an image. Once you learn to do any of these things, you can do them over and over again to create a wide range of image types. When you're just getting started using Photoshop, you may want to stick to simple, clean edits that you can make repeatedly. You can get things done quickly and easily by following the tutorials in this book. However, you may want to try some more advanced editing techniques with the kinds of effects we discuss in the following sections. * Add, change, and eliminate layers Every image is made up of layers. Photoshop uses them for four different purposes, explained in this list. • Layer. A layer is a container that holds the pixels of an image. Layer objects such as Background, Photo Realistic, Type, and Special Effects are accessed from the Layers panel. You can add and delete layers, and you can change any of the settings you see in any layer. You can make a layer transparent, lock it, or even create a special effect with layers. You can have multiple layers within an image, and you can even merge them all into one. • Layer Mask. A layer mask can be used to hide or show portions of an image. The layer mask is used in combination with other tools and Layer Styles. You can either hide parts of the image with a layer mask, leaving only part of the image behind, or display what's hidden with a transparency. Because a layer mask is only a view mask, it doesn't control the pixels in an image. To control pixels, you use the regular layers. • Layer Comps. A layer comp is a copy of a single image layer within a Photoshop document. A copy creates a new layer object, so an image made up of multiple layers is actually just made up of one or more copies of layers. A layer comp is one type of a blending option that combines the contents of two layers into a single, merged layer. • Blending mode. A blending mode is a type of adjustment layer that can combine the contents of one layer with the contents of These two functions are: the determination of the cause of a decline in the utilization of the facility and the determination of the cause of an increase in the utilization of the facility. The function for determining the cause of a decline in the utilization of the facility is to determine the cause of a decrease in the utilization ratio of the facility. And, the function for determining the cause of an increase in the utilization of the facility is to determine the cause of an increase in the utilization ratio of the facility. Conventionally, however, the determination of these causes has been made through a confirmation survey which involves an enormous cost and onerous work. The article "Investigation of a Computer System for Quality Control in Facilities Management" by H. Kunin, published in the Information Processing Society, Vol. 7, No. 1, Jan. 1981 will be cited as reference. A sample inspection is conventionally carried out as a measure of quality control. (1) As means for representing the temporal property of the quality, a function is given to an integrated circuit for determining the cause of a decline in the utilization ratio and the cause of an increase in the utilization ratio. (2) As means for representing the property of the quality of goods, a function is given to an integrated circuit for determining the cause of a decline in the utilization ratio of the resource and the cause of an increase in the utilization ratio of the resource.
